DATA SHEET EXPLANATION

The following points may help you better understand the data you have received. EPA staff will be happy to discuss any additional questions or concerns with you.

Table 1. Indoor Air Samples

Sample location - This column describes where the sample was collected.

Fiber Length - This column shows the different sizes of asbestos fibers EPA measured. A micron (μm) is a microscopic measurement (25,400 μm are in 1 inch). Fibers with a length to width ratio of 5:1 (5 μm long, 1 μm wide) are believed to cause the most damage. "Other" means that the fiber size was not of the length and width of concern.

Asbestos concentration in cubic centimeters - This is a measure of the number of asbestos fibers in a known volume of air. Cubic centimeters (cc) is the most commonly used unit for volume. Each time you breath you inhale about 1000 cc air. EPA pulled approximately 4000 liters (4,000,000 cc) of air through the filter. The filter is divided into 37,000 grid openings and EPA counts a subset of those grid openings.

Tremolite-Actinolite - These are asbestos fibers that are associated with the vermiculite ore mined in Libby.

Chrysotile - These are asbestos fibers that are associated with heating duct insulation, floor tiles and ceiling tiles. This type of asbestos is not associated with the Libby mine.

Original - The sample results that were reported to you at the end of January 2000. These results show the concentration of fibers based on a count of fibers from 10 grid openings out of about 37,000 grid openings.

Recount - The sample results that were reported to you the week of March 6, 2000. These sample results show the concentration of fibers based on a count of fibers from 30 grid openings out of about 37,000 grid openings.

Level of Immediate Concern - Estimating the concentration of asbestos fibers in air that is of immediate health concern is a difficult process, and no sharp boundary between "safe" and "not safe" can be identified. However, based on the best available information, if the concentration of fibers longer than 10 μm is above about 0.0003 fibers/cc, there is a basis for immediate concern over increased risk of cancer. Likewise, for fibers that are 5-10 μm in length, if the concentration is higher than about 0.0200 fibers/cc, it is believed that there is a basis for immediate concern. There may also be risk at lower concentrations, but these are not judged to be of immediate concern.
